Product no.: IN-941137

Royal - the "Ecological Eagle" by Kurt Arentz - exclusively at ars mundi.

Kurt Arentz's great interest in ecological issues was closely linked to his fascination with the animal world as a motif in his art. And so Arentz was delighted when his "Ecological Eagle" was selected by the New York committee "Artists for Ecology" as an award for ecologically effective public figures. The choice of the eagle as a motif is a wise one, as it is a proverbial sharp observer of its environment and, at the same time, existentially dependent on it.

The laureate of the award in 1993 was Prince Charles (now Charles III, King of England). When choosing Charles, the committee didn't think of the laureate as the representative of the European royalty but rather the organic farmer and prominent eco-activist, who, as the son of Elizabeth II, already distinguished himself for a long time at that time. In addition to the copy that King Charles received, there is only one other sculpture, which is in the possession of the Arentz family.
